About the speaker:

Mark Sneddon has been one of Australia's leading practitioner in e-commerce, banking and financial services law and regulation, and privacy and information law for over 20 years. His clients are mainly financial services organisations, governments and corporates.

He has practised with Clayton Utz in these fields for 12 years and before that part time over 11 years while he was a legal academic. Mark was an Associate Professor of Law at the University of Melbourne, before joining Clayton Utz, where he taught constitutional law, banking and security law, telecommunications law. He has also taught in these areas at Monash University and comparative courses in constitutional law at Osgoode Hall Law School in Canada and international banking law at Loyola Law School in Los Angeles.

Prior to commencing his academic career, Mark was Associate to Justice Sir Gerard Brennan of the High Court and worked for the Legal and Constitutional Committee of the Parliament of Victoria on law reform references and was a solicitor at Mallesons.

Mark is married with 2 sons. He has been a Christian for 30 years and has led small groups of Christian lawyers and law students over many years. He is currently a member of St Alfred's Anglican Church in Blackburn.
